16-year-old Katniss Everdeen is from the 12th District where she hunts with her friend Gale to bring food home to their families. When her sister gets picked to be in the Hunger Games, Katniss steps up to take her place.

You should definitely read The Hunger Games. It's obviously famous for good reasons. Katniss's world is well-developed and interesting, and you get to learn more about it as you read the book. It has lovable characters with unique personalities. The concept of The Hunger Games is also very creative, and I think it's very well executed.

People who like books about dystopian societies, futuristic societies, and survival stories would enjoy The Hunger Games. The book is written in present tense. If you don't like reading stories written in present tense, I'd still recommend you at least give it a chance. I was thrown off by the present tense when I started the book, but quickly forgot because of the story. The book also partially focuses on a complicated romance. I don't really read romance novels, but I thought it was a charming part of the book.
