Jia, Ariel, and Everett are best friends living in Queens. They have always lived near each other, and they have been friends for a very long time. When Ariel goes to San Francisco for a scholarship in STEM, Everett goes to Ohio to perform in a theater production, and Jia has to stay home to help with her parents' restaurant, what will happen to these 3 friends? We see our characters go through major realizations, and struggle to figure out what to do.

This book is a great representation of many different people's experiences. You will be able to find something to relate to in at least one of these characters. Each chapter changes the perspective, keeping you engaged. The story touches on important topics, and it does it in a really good way. I really recommend this book to anyone that isn't perfect. This book will help you feel okay about things you are going through, while also teaching you about what others are experiencing. If you enjoy Coming of Age and YA, you might enjoy this book!
