Juliette Ferrars is a 17 year old girl with a lethal touch. She can hurt and possibly kill anyone who comes into contact with her skin. The Reestablishment, the dictatorial government in charge, locks her away. Almost a year after being locked up, Juliette faces a tough decision; become the government's weapon or fight for her freedom.

I don't think everyone should read this book. Although it is well-written, the author described a lot of simple events in multiple paragraphs that could be described in a couple of sentences. This just makes the book confusing for its readers. The types of readers that would like this book are readers that are able to understand long descriptions without any of them purpose being stated. The novel focuses on the main character readjusting to the world she has been locked away from.
