In All Better Now, by Neal Shusterman, a plague rages across the globe. In a post-Covid Earth, Crown Royale carries a four percent mortality rate, but those who survive are devoid of all negative feeling and emotion.

I really like this book, because it explores how humanity can adapt in the face of a highly contagious, and potentially world ending virus. In general, I love dystopian sci-fi, so I found it interesting.

If you are a big fan of science fiction, or not, I recommend reading this book, I think it is an eight out of ten that I would happily reread.
