The guy she was interested wasn't a guy at all, or more commonly known as green yuri, is a romance manga involving two woman who fall in love due to their common love for music. The outgoing popular girl Mitsuki Koga falls for a mysterious guy at her favorite cd shop because they have a shared love for the same music. As it turns out, the mysterious guy is actually Koga's classmate, Aya Osawa, who is an introvert and avid music lover, who doesn't know how to handle another girl having a crush on her.

For someone who doesn't usually enjoy romance media, I enjoyed this manga thoroughly, as I thought it was very cute. The plot and is very laid back and at times comedic, but the story does get a little tense and serious at times. My favorite part, was the use of music in this manga, because they talk about and reference many rock bands, and music is one of the main core elements of the romance between the two girls. Overall I recommend this manga to anybody who enjoys romance in the slightest, especially yuri, because this manga is really enjoyable and a thoughtful read.
