Blue lock by Muneyuki Kaneshiro illustrated by Yusuke Nomura begins in the year 2018, immediately following the FIFA World Cup in which Japan lost in the best sixteen. Because Japan has never won a world cup and is on track to never even being close to it, two people who still have hope in Japanese soccer step up and propose a solution. That solution is Blue Lock. This program entails that the egos of the top 300 high school strikers in Japan are gathered in one place and will be forced to compete in order to create the world's greatest striker, with the goal of winning the World Cup in mind.

Even though I will admit that Blue Lock is somewhat lacking in the in the writing department, it still is absolutely my favorite manga/story of all time. I love the way it explores the different types of ways people chase their goals with only their own desires in mind. Not only that, but it is also the reason why I began to play soccer in the first place.

Even though I personally loved reading all over 300 chapters of Blue Lock it definitely is not for everybody. If you prefer more a more complex style of writing the I would not recommend it. However even if that is the case I am sure that anyone would be able to enjoy Yusuke Nomura's beautiful art style.

Overall, Blue Lock is not for everybody but you love an action filled, exciting story then Blue Lock is definitely for you.
